HOLISTIC EDUCATION

ECO-FARM | COMMUNITY BUILDING | EMPOWERMENT

Every individual has a right to culturally relevant, environmentally sustainable, nutritious food, and affordable, quality education.

Tejiendo Futuros, in Panajachel, Guatemala includes a holistic after school child education program to, in the words of founder and community member Ingrid Villaseñor, teach children how to think for themselves and become leaders in their community. To make that a reality, Tejiendo Futuros not only supplies the children with enriching academic support and training, but is developing a community-run sustainable farm and eco-tourism reserve.

The seven acre educational and environmentally sustainable farm will revive the Mayan culture of the community and increase the availability and affordability of fresh, culturally based foods. It will have an orchard grove, farm animals, seasonal vegetables, and medicinal herbs. Mothers and children will work on the farm, learning business and farming skills while being able to sell the produce for revenue.

To be part of these efforts, Gina is fundraising $20,000, all of which goes to Tejiendo Futuros and the work mentioned above which will help make their organization economically self-sufficient while improving the lives of community members in the ways they want.
